Re: Request for Information from Annual Appropriation Committee Hearing

ID#: 41-02 Chronic Disease

The following information is provided in response to questions posed at our department's hearing on September 30, 2021 to discuss the proposed 2022 budget.

Alderman Tunney asked for details about the Chicago Department of Public Health's chronic disease funding.

Chronic diseases, like heart disease and stroke, diabetes, chronic respiratory disease, and cancer are responsible for nearly half of our city's racial life expectancy gap. This is unjust, unacceptable, and preventable. Most chronic diseases can be prevented or managed by eating well, being physically active, avoiding tobacco, managing stress, and getting regular health screenings. But, we know that access to the resources, environments and opportunities needed for good health are inequitably distributed across our city. Public health science shows that the most effective chronic disease prevention strategies are cross-cutting and aimed at promoting healthy communities. Therefore, addressing chronic disease disparities requires tackling barriers to good health such as policies and environments that limit, for example, access to clean air, healthy foods, physical activity, and resources for the prevention, screening and treatment of chronic diseases.

In 2022, the Chicago Department of Public Health's corporate chronic disease budget is $975,000, or 0.09% of our overall Corporate budget. This breaks down into the following investments:

- $175,000 to develop a health and race equity impact assessment that helps to embed equity in decision making on policies and environments.
- $200,000 to help current tobacco users quit through community-based smoking cessation services.
- $600,000 to provide screening mammograms, navigation support, and community outreach to women who experience barriers to high quality, preventative breast health care.

Of note, the Corporate budget does not include the limited grant funding that the Chicago Department of Public Health receives for chronic disease, which provides additional support for activities to prevent tobacco use among youth and young adults (~$500k annually), and to promote healthy eating through SNAP double value for fruits and vegetables at farmers markets (~$250k in 2022).

There are also other City and Chicago Department of Public Health investments included within the 2022 budget that will ultimately help address chronic disease. A few examples include:

- $10M in American Rescue Plan (ARP) funding to increase equitable community access to healthy foods and support local food businesses.
- $10M in ARP funding to advance equitable transit-oriented development by supporting community-driven development near transit to foster healthy, walkable, affordable, and accessible communities.
- $15M in ARP funding to provide community-based navigation resources to increase access and awareness for public support services.

However, even with these cross-cutting City and additional Chicago Department of Public Health investments, the Chicago Department of Public Health's chronic disease budget remains insufficient to address the current burden and disparities. Several years ago, the Chicago Department of Public Health conducted an audit of chronic disease prevention funding at comparable health departments, finding an average investment of $2.20 per resident and an average of 11.0 FTE dedicated to these activities per population of 1,000,000. As a current example, the City of Philadelphia, a jurisdiction with 1.2M fewer residents than Chicago, is proposing $8.5M for chronic disease prevention in their 2022 budget with half of that funding coming from general revenue (i.e. corporate funding).

As I stated during our budget hearing, the Chicago Department of Public Health would welcome new resources dedicated to chronic disease prevention so that we may address the single biggest contributor to Chicago's racial life expectancy gap.

As always, please let me know if you have any further questions.

ID#: 41-13 RFP Metrics

The following information is provided in response to questions posed at our department's hearing on September 30, 2021 to discuss the proposed 2022 budget.

Alderman Lopez asked what the RFP metrics for delegate agencies are.

Evaluation criteria used to guide review and scoring vary by the RFP and are driven by funder(s) requirements, epidemiologic and other data, community input and program priorities. Health and racial equity drives both the content of the RFP and the evaluation criteria used to review applications. All RFPs explicitly describe how the funds align with Healthy Chicago 2025, the City's community health plan focused on reducing the life expectancy gap between black and white Chicagoans and addressing the declines in life expectancy for other Chicagoans of color. All RFPs ask respondents to describe how the applicant's organization's policies and practices align with CDPH's guiding principles (deconstructing racist systems, trauma prevention and trauma-informed services, cultural responsiveness, and health equity in all communities). Data is used to guide where services are most needed and in some cases, the type of service(s) needed.

Additional common evaluation criteria used to assess equity include the organization's hiring process, detailing diversity and inclusion efforts, and what specifically will be done to ensure that hired staff have lived, worked, or have significant knowledge of the communities in which the applicant proposes to deliver services; race and gender of staff and board members; the organization's cultural and linguistic competency policies and procedures; and the availability of translation services and/or materials in multiple languages.

Typical evaluation areas include:

1. Program activities and scope of service
2. Staffing plan
3. Capacity and experience
4. Budget and budget justification
5. Fiscal capacity
6. Evaluation and/or quality management
7. Data collection and reporting
8. Alignment with CDPH's guiding principles
